Improvements to the advanced search interface were identified during Usability Testing and UX analysis of this feature.

Using a search phrase instead of disjointed drop downs.

Should be obvious to users now how this works. Next page shows what happens when user clicks on the drop downs in the search phrase.

When user types a phrase in the search field, a new row appears below it, this way, the user can enter any number of search terms in various fields.

The 3 layers show what happens when the user selects the drop downs in the intro sentence.

In the repository layer, the user should also be able to search so that he can jump directly to a repository without scrolling through the long list (especially important on Archives Canada)

Search tips are crucial to be linked here to help users understand the finer points of how they can search.

Following the Usability Testing and a UX analysis of how ICA-AtoM displays digital objects and their related descriptions, enhancements have been made to the UI.

This page shows how a digital object is presented as part of the archival description. Users can use the arrow buttons to browse to the next/previous digital object (if there are any)
Digital Object Metadata is hidden by default and can be revealed with the "show details" link

Admin View: If there is no digital object attached to an archival description, the archivist can upload a digital object. We reuse the same black area to emphasize where the new digital object will appear.

If the user wants to upload multiple digital objects as children of the current description, he can do so on the left in the tree:
UPLOAD button in tree starts the "Import Digital Objects" process. New descriptions will appear as children of the currently selected description.
The "ADD" button creates a new description underneath the current one (same as the ADD NEW button in ICA-AtoM 1.2)

History

The City of Vancouver constructed a maritime museum as its project for the British Columbia Centennial of 1958. In 1959, City Council established a board to administer the Maritime and City Museum. The Maritime Museum formally opened in 1960. In 1972, the Vancouver Museum and Planetarium Association took over the management and operation of the Maritime Museum. In 1974, the Maritime Museum designated the City Archives as its official archives, thus many research collections acquired by the Vancouver Maritime Museum have been transferred to the City Archives

Mandates/Sources of authority

The W B and M H Chung Library maintains and collects items documenting Canadian marine heritage, principally of the Pacific Northwest and the Canadian Arctic. More general themes surrounding our interaction with the sea are also included and become more global in coverage. Holdings consist of ephemeral materials, press clippings, vessel documents, and related correspondence, on sail, steam and motor vessels. Other formats include photographs, photo albums, scrap books, log books, ship plans, charts, and manuscripts.

We worked hard to make the tree on the left more usable than the current implementation.
The main issue are the long archival description titles which currently wrap in 3-4 lines and make the tree unreadable.
Our solution: when the user rolls over the tree with the mouse, the tree expands towards the right side of the screen.
